

Social Media Messaging During Severe Weather

Cort Scholten and Dan Cobb

NOAA / National Weather Service, Grand Rapids, MI

With the increasing reach of social media, it is important to develop a strategy for delivering a steady stream of actionable information during severe weather. This includes issuing outlook and preparedness information leading up to the event. This presentation looks at how this messaging has evolved and presents ideas for formatting and issuing information most effectively as severe weather is unfolding.