

OVERVIEW: The remnants of Laura will be moving across the Mid-Atlantic region on Saturday. Any flood threat is limited to smaller rivers and streams

Affected Rivers	Primary areas of concern would be across Virginia and northward into eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey where soils have been saturated due to recent rains
Timing	Rain will be moving across the region on Saturday. Any river response will be Saturday and into Sunday.
Hazards & Impacts	Generally 1-2 inches of rain over much of the region although locally heavier amounts are possible. Note that there will be showers across much of the region on Friday that will contribute to total rainfall amounts. No flooding is currently forecast at our river forecast locations although smaller rivers and streams could be impacted.
Confidence	Increasing confidence for the 1-2 inches of rain but still some uncertainty as to the potential for, and locations of, locally higher amounts

