During the afternoon of June 26th, the wildfire exhibited extreme fire behavior during Red Flag conditions. An outflow boundary from thunderstorms to the northwest, hit the wildfire and drove it down the mountainside into northwest Colorado Springs. Winds gusted to around 65 mph with the fire storm, which consumed 347 structures and took the lives of a husband and wife in one of the houses. At the peak, 32,000 people were evacuated from their houses for a number of days. The President declared Colorado Springs a major disaster area.

 A photograph capturing a massive fire storm or firenado over a town at dusk. The fire is a towering wall of orange and red flames, with a bright white core, rising from a mountain side. The sky is dark, and the fire's glow illuminates the surrounding area. In the foreground, a parking lot with several cars and a few people watching the event is visible. A commercial building with a sign is also present in the middle ground.
