

National Weather Service Raleigh News

By: Ryan Ellis

Don't Miss Your Opportunity to Tour NWS Raleigh!

Did you know that once per month during the school year, the National Weather Service in Raleigh opens its doors for tours? On designated tour days, six 1.5 hour timeslots are reserved for tour groups to come in and attend a presentation by one of our meteorologists followed by a tour of the operations area where you can gain insight on what forecasters do on duty every day. Learn about the different ways we observe and forecast the weather as well as the many different aspects of our job and the decision makers and partners that we serve.

While our office is not big enough to accommodate large groups, we can take small groups up to 20 people. Singles and very small groups are welcome, but know that you may be combined with a larger group in order to maximize participation for everyone.

The suggested minimum age for attendees is 5th grade and above.

If you are part of a larger school group that would like to have a meteorologist come and speak at your school please feel free to contact us at rah.tours@noaa.gov to arrange a visit from a meteorologist.

For a list of current available tour days, more information, and to sign up for a tour please visit our tours page online at :

www.weather.gov/rah/tours

We hope to see you soon on a future tour day at NWS Raleigh!

NWS Raleigh is located in Research Building III on the Centennial Campus of NC State University.

