Charles City Asks Help

Charles City Mayor James Johnson, Wednesday afternoon, asked farmers and rural home owners to send clothes to help clean up work in the community.

"I don't know where we'll put it," said Charlie Hutton in the rampages that followed the tornado. "We've got to do something soon," he said. "We'll have to do something before the homes are demolished."

Hutton, a resident of Charles City, said, "I don't know where we'll put it. We've got to do something soon."

"It's too big for us," he said. "We've got to do something soon."

Charles City Mayor James Johnson, Wednesday afternoon, asked farmers and rural home owners to send clothes to help clean up work in the community.

"I don't know where we'll put it," said Charlie Hutton in the rampages that followed the tornado. "We've got to do something soon," he said. "We'll have to do something before the homes are demolished."

Hutton, a resident of Charles City, said, "I don't know where we'll put it. We've got to do something soon."

"It's too big for us," he said. "We've got to do something soon."