

Charles City Man Listed As Killed Found Alive

Residents of tornado-ravaged communities in north-eastern Iowa took time out to attend church services Sunday, then plunged back into the heart-breaking chore of cleaning up from last Wednesday's killer tornadoes.

A lot of differences were ignored in the wake of the twisters, which claimed 16 lives, injured hundreds and caused millions of dollars in property damage.

At Charles City, Methodists prayed at the Lutheran Church, the Baptists at the First Christian Church and the Catholics at the junior high school building.

Meanwhile, officials issued a plea for trailer homes at Charles City, where an estimated 500 persons are homeless. They plan to lease some 300 of the units, then sublet them to residents for periods ranging up to two years.

Officials at both cities said they were pleased with the progress of the cleaning up campaign. However, the Highway Patrol said it was having trouble keeping out curiosity-seekers who lined highways leading into Oelwein Sunday.

Floyd County Sheriff L. L. Lane said one person believed to have been killed in the twister at Charles City actually is alive.

He said the name of Tom Hall was released by mistake last week through his office as one of the fatalities. A deputy explained: "There's so much confusion around here, I'm not sure how the name got on the list."

The deletion lowered the Charles City toll to 13, rather than 14, and cut the state total to 16.

Sen. Jack Miller, R-Iowa, made a tour of the tornado damage at Charles City and Oelwein, then pledged to redouble his efforts for a bill that would allow grants and loans of up to $100,000 to farmers, homeowners and businessmen stricken by natural disaster.

"This is the greatest amount of destruction I've seen," said Miller.
