Flood Waters Bring Death and Destruction to Republican Valley

Valley Flooded As River Leaves Its Banks Early Morning; Loss Is Tremendous

3 STRATTON FOLKS DROWNED

The worst flood in the history of the state occurred yesterday, and the loss of life and property was tremendous. It swept through the town without warning, killing many and destroying homes and businesses. The waters rose almost immediately and rushed like a torrent through the streets, carrying everything in their path.

The town of Stratton, located near the banks of the Republican River, was hit particularly hard. The river burst its banks early in the morning, causing widespread flooding. Many residents were caught off guard, and the situation quickly escalated into a disaster.

In the town, a heavy rain fell overnight, and the river level continued to rise throughout the night. By the time dawn broke, the town was facing a major flood threat. The river flooded several homes and businesses, and people were forced to evacuate.

The floodwaters continued to rise, and the town was soon surrounded by water. Many homes and businesses were damaged, and the town was left in a state of chaos.

The floodwaters claimed the lives of three Stratton residents, and many others were injured. The town was completely destroyed, and the residents were left with nothing but the clothes on their backs.

The flood was caused by heavy rains and a sudden rise in the river level, which overwhelmed the town's defenses. The town is now in the process of rebuilding, and the residents are working to recover from the devastating effects of the flood.
