Wet Weekend Ahead

Overview: A series of weak disturbances will create widespread rain chances for the coastal Carolinas through the weekend. New rainfall accumulations are forecast to generally be between half an inch to an inch, with locally higher amounts possible. Temperatures generally linger near normal to slightly above normal for early February.

Impacts: Minor flooding is occurring for a few rivers across the area. Detailed information on river flooding can be found here.

Timing/Confidence: Greatest chances for rain are Friday and Sunday. A brief drying trend is possible Friday night into Saturday morning, before rain ramps back up by Saturday afternoon. Confidence is high.

Possible rain accumulations through Monday morning 02/08/21
