Overview: A warm day away from the coast today. Much-needed rain is expected in the last half of the week, as a cold front moves to the Carolina Coast on Tuesday and will remain in the area through the week. This front will bring much-needed rain to the region with the best chances Wednesday into Friday.

Rainfall amounts: 2 to 3” of rain is expected late Tuesday into Friday. The most significant rainfall is expected Wednesday and Friday.

Primary Threats: Small Craft Advisory in effect through noon Tuesday and again Friday evening. Patchy dense sea fog is possible tonight along the beach and over the coastal waters.

Today’s highs ranging from the middle 80s inland and to the mid 70s at the beaches.

NWS WPC, Forecast Rain Amounts through Saturday 7AM