A Md. task of snow removing from 50-inch to eight inches in depth, depending on the area. The streets in the area have not been cleared, and many have been left snow-covered.

According to Aurora Green, a local resident, "The streets are so icy that we have to be careful when we walk."

The City Police Department said that the snow has been cleared from the principal roads and that there have been no reports of accidents.

"We would like to thank all of our city workers who have been working tirelessly to clear the roads," Green said.

The streets in the city center have been cleared, and the sidewalks have been plowed. However, the roads in the outskirts of the city are still covered in snow.

A number of vehicles have been stranded, and some residents have had to walk to their destinations.

"We were stuck in our cars for over an hour," said Samantha Johnson, a resident of the city. "It was a truly frightening experience."
