Subject: Soliciting Comments on Discontinuing the Text Only River Forecast and Daily River Text Products in Alaska until August 2, 2019

The NWS is accepting public comments until August 2, 2019, on a proposal to discontinue the Text only River Forecast (RVA) and Daily River Text products (RVD) in Alaska.

These text products were developed many years ago to provide hydrologic observations and related information in a format that met the needs of users at the time. A majority of this information is available through the Advanced Hydrologic Prediction System (AHPS) as graphical hydrographs, tabular data and machine-readable eXtensible Markup Language (XML) formatted data. See:

<https://water.weather.gov/ahps/>

While observations for river locations in Alaska will be available on AHPS, the daily trend forecast for some locations will not be available.

The Daily River Summary product provides hydrologic forecasts and observations in Standard Hydrometeorological Exchange Format (SHEF). Current users are requested to use the newer, more complete, data available in XML and tabular formats.

Products proposed to be discontinued:

A Service Change Notice will be sent before terminating these products.
